Bring on the Spartans

Aggies prepare for Big Ten season opener

By Jaden Johnson
SPORTS CONTENT MANGER

Only eight college football teams in the nation return 18 starters or more from last season. Friday night's matchup between Utah State and Michigan State features two of those.

The Aggies, who rank tied for fourth in the nation in terms of experience according to Phil Steele Magazine, have more returning starters than any other team on their schedule. That is, except for Michigan State.

The Spartans return 10 offensive starters and nine defensive starters from a squad which went 10-3 and finished No. 15 in the nation in the AP Poll. No team in the nation has more returning talent.

Offensively, the lone non-returning Spartan is center Brian Allen, fourth-round draft pick to the Los Angeles Rams who had 38 career starts for Michigan State. Defensively, the Spartans will look to replace the production of defensive end Demetrius Cooper and linebacker Chris Frey, who is now with the Carolina Panthers.

"The thing you kind of look at is the consistency they've had in their coaching staff and their schemes," said Utah State head coach Matt Wells. "That's the first thing you're looking for. Then, as you see the players, certainly, there's a lot of them coming back."

En route to a second-place finish in the Big Ten East division in 2017, the three losses on Michigan State's schedule came against No. 11 Notre Dame, No. 17 Northwestern, and No. 5 Ohio State. Meanwhile, the Spartans picked up wins against Michigan, Washington State, and No. 8 Penn State.

One key for the Aggies in this matchup may be their ability to stop the run. In 2017, USU ranked 115th in the nation in rushing defense, allowing 216.4 yards per contest. Meanwhile, Michigan state returns three of its top five rushers from last season's squad, which averaged 167.8 yards per game.

"Our experience is a plus," said senior safety Gaje Ferguson of the defense's ability to stop the run. "We have a lot of guys back and we have a different game plan. We now have (defensive coordinator) Keith Patterson and he's very run-stop minded. He's going to bring a lot to our defense this year and helping stop the run. It's going to be a lot different this year than it has been in year's past."

The MSU offense is led by junior quarterback Brian Lewerke and senior running back LJ Scott, both members of the Athlon Magazine preseason All-Big Ten second team. Lewerke passed for 2793 yards along with 20 touchdowns and seven interceptions in 2017, while Scott had 898 rushing yards for eight touchdowns and 1044 all-purpose yards.

The Spartan defense is highlighted by 2017 All-Big Ten first-team selection David Dowell. In his sophomore season, the safety ranked fifth in the nation with 11 interceptions. He also recorded four pass deflections and was second on the team with 75 total tackles on the season.

Michigan State also boasts a notorious front seven on defense, one which held opponents to just 95.3 yards per game, the second fewest behind only Alabama. Junior linebacker Joe Bachie is a do-it-all kind of a player for the Spartans, leading the team in total tackles last season with 100, as well as recording 7.5 tackles for a loss, 2.5 sacks, and three interceptions.

New Residence hall opens for students but is not yet completed

After a year of construction delays and uncertainty about the completion of a new residence hall, Utah State University has finally opened the new Central Suites residence hall, a co-ed, suite-style hall.

However, most of the amenities have yet to be completed, and students can hear the buzz of saws and pounding of tools right below their beds.

"I think the new building will be worth the wait once everything is finished in a few months, but right now, I do not think it is," said Jordan Price, who previously lived in Valley View Tower but is now among the first residents of Central Suites.

USU announced in February 2016 its intentions to demolish Valley View Tower and build a new dorm-style residence hall in central campus. Slated to be completed in time for the fall semester of 2017, construction was delayed after winter 2017 due to weather, tool theft and a lack of workers.

"It is a difficult construction market right now," said Steve Jenson, the executive director of housing services. "It is hard to get sufficient help, and some of the materials were hard to come by as well."

Jenson said that it was not USU who delayed construction, but the company who built the towers, Rimrock Construction, a Draper, Utah-based company that builds many types of residential, industrial and retail buildings.

Some of the amenities that were advertised in Central Suites included study rooms, exercise rooms, a theater room, and lounges with multiple pool and ping-pong tables.

"It is just a little annoying that none of the cool things that made me want to live there aren't done yet," Price said.

The outdoor amenities, which include a volleyball court and an outdoor projector screen in the firepit-lined courtyard, are expected to be completed by October, Jenson said.

"The plan is to finish within the next few weeks," he said. On the other hand, Valley View Tower is now empty and is scheduled to be taken down in May 2018.

said of the Michigan State defensive front seven. "Hopefully, the pace can wear them out a little bit and get them tired. There's no secret that we're going to play with pace on offense. To see where they ranked coming out of last year against the teams they did it against is pretty impressive. They're deep and they're talented. It'll be maybe the best we see all year."

The 2017 Spartan defense also ranked seventh in the nation in total yards allowed, averaging just 297.6 yards per game allowed, and 37th in turnovers forced with 23.

"They have some big boys up front. They have some nice linebackers, so it's going to be a war in those trenches come Friday night. I'm more prepared than I ever have been in my entire life," said senior offensive lineman Rob Castaneda. "I'm excited to be on a big stage like that and it's going to be a fun night for our team."

Even though the Aggies will begin the season on a big stage in front of 75,000 fans, Wells feels confident that his team will be able to come out prepared on Friday night.

"It will be a tremendous opportunity for our guys to go see right where we're at, and our guys are excited about it," he said. "This is a team that I'm anxious to watch play as we come together. Camp has been good, it's been physical and it's been a grind as most camps are. Our guys are excited and prepared for this opportunity to play Friday night."

The Aggies and the Spartans kick off Friday at 5 p.m. MST in East Lansing, Mich.

Nine USU students receive Emmy Award nominations

By Alison Berg
NEWS SENIOR WRITER

Brian Champagne’s face lit up when he received news that eight of his students are nominated for collegiate Emmy Awards delivered by the Rocky Mountain Region of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, the highest number of nominees Champagne has seen in his eight years of teaching at Utah State University.

“I knew we had good stuff going in, but that really blew me away,” said Champagne, an associate professor of journalism and communication.

Taylor Emerson, a USU senior, and Erin Cox, a 2018 USU graduate, both received nominations for two stories they did for Aggie TV News, while three students from Champagne’s course on documentaries received nominations. A special episode of Aggie TV News was also nominated and a video sponsored by the English department took the final slot.

The Rocky Mountain Region includes Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Colorado and part of California, which, Emerson said, includes tough competition.

“To go against (the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism), to go against BYU, to go against these schools that have bigger budgets and more resources than we do, individually it’s great, but it really shows the strength of not just that group but the journalism program,” he said.

Cox received her nominations for a feature story she did on the First Presbyterian Church of Logan’s handbell choir, as well as a series of stories reporting on sexual assault at USU. Emerson earned his nominations for a sports segment he did and a story on a man who makes surfboards in his backyard. Lindsay Sousa, a student from the documentary class, earned her spot for non-fiction documentary about the beast rumored to live in Bear Lake while Sousa’s classmate Austin Elder received a nomination for a documentary on the Navajo Nation. Ethan Smith is a nominee for a piece titled “Delwyn Builds,” and Cache Rendezvous, a segment of Aggie-TV, won for an entire show.

Students producing Aggie-TV do so for a three-hours-per-day, four-days-a-week class called newscast, taught by Associate Professor Brian Champagne and Practical Practice Assistant Professor Chris Garff.

Though the students do all recording, writing and production of the show themselves, many attributed part of their success to Champagne and Garff.

“I think what Brian Champagne and Chis Garff taught me the most was to do my best in everything I did and to get it perfect,” said Cox, who is now a reporter at Fox 13 news. “Behind every successful student is teachers that worked twice as hard to get them there.”

Emerson agreed, adding “they will be there every time you need them, when you need them.”

Though Cox acknowledges the honor in receiving the nomination, winning an award was never at the forefront of her mind.

“We, as journalists don’t do our stories for nominations, that’s not why we do them, but it feels good when you get it,” she said.

Seven Aggie TV students won Emmy Awards in 2016, the first round of students to win since Champagne has taught at USU.

Award winners will be announced Sept. 22 at a gala in Phoenix.

Students and faculty praise new benches in Old Main

By Naomi Ward
NEWS STAFF WRITER

Students and faculty gathered in Old Main to be the first to sit on the new third floor benches at the College of Humanities’ Bench-a-Palooza event Friday morning.

According to Joe Ward, the dean of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences, the bench project was made possible through contributions from USUSA and staff member Chris Okelberry.

“Speaking on behalf of faculty and students on the third floor, we frequently saw students sitting on the ground between classes and we saw these benches as an opportunity to help students,” said Ward.

“These are going to make Old Main look much classier, now that we don’t have to sit on the floor anymore,” said CHaSS student Bentlee Rice.

While there has been seating available on the lower floors of Old Main, the third floor where the political science and history offices are located had none until this week. The new benches also include electrical outlets for students to charge their phones or laptops while working on homework before class.

Students described navigating the third-floor hallway in the past, stepping over other students’ legs and charger cords to get through. QUOTE One student mentioned that perhaps those that don’t frequent the halls of Old Main may not understand the hype for the new benches.

Former college senator Grant Bess said, “Some Aggies don’t fully grasp the pain in the CHaSS we had going without these new benches. This is one of the bigger accomplishments of the classroom improvement fund of USUSA as far as I’m concerned.”

Faculty and students celebrate additional seating in Old Main. Students were seen sitting on the floor between classes, which inspired the new benches. The benches feature power outlets.

After Dean Ward thanked facilities for their work building the benches and cut the ribbon to officially “open” the benches for business, students and faculty sat down together as many other students will do in the upcoming year.

Helping Students Get Involved

By Nate Cutler
STUDENT LIFE WRITER

Welcome to Utah State University where we have a pretty campus, accomplished alumni and cheap tuition.

While these may be reasonable excuses to attend, they do not capture the real reason why Logan is so beloved. To grasp the heart and soul of “The Scotsman,” our famous anthem, we sing, “Show me the true-blooded Aggie from Utah who doesn’t love the spot where the sagebrush grows.”

We look deeper than the words and find what gives us reason to be lifelong Aggies. We commit to something bigger than ourselves. What makes USU so comfortable? It’s the people we surround ourselves with who seek to better our workplaces, our communities and our beautiful school. It’s the people here that make this university feel like home!

Part of the university experience includes getting involved with campus activities and organizations. Whether you’re looking to meet people or become part of an organization, it’s sometimes difficult to know where to start or how to join.

If you’ve ever felt stuck or unsure which campus organization has the best fit for you, here are a few ideas to get started.

Daria Griffiths, a college of humanities and social sciences senior and the Utah State University Student Association representative for Student Alumni Association, created the Student Involvement Map to help students identify different organizations already established on campus.

“I call it the SIM,” she said.

The SIM is an interactive flowchart display designed to show all of the student groups available on campus.

Daria Griffiths, USUSA representative for the Student Alumni Association, organized a student involvement map to help students get involved with different activities and organizations around USU's campus.

“I told my roommates I was a part of SAA, President’s Cabinet and other student organizations and they had no idea what I was talking about,” Griffiths said. “So I drew them a diagram and realized the entire student body needs this.”

The SIM took three years in the making. Griffiths met personally with staff and student leaders, asking them questions to better understand what they do and where she could get involved. She said this was her initiative from the 2017 Miss USU Pageant, of which she was awarded First Attendant. It sparked to life in Matt Sanders’ Communication and Leadership course and she got the green light campus from Linda Zimmerman at the Student Involvement Office.

By using the SIM, students can observe how organizations are interrelated and distinguish the lesser known organizations from the more visible ones. Most students are first introduced to the A-Team, Ambassadors, Blue Crew, the Hurd or Fraternity and Sorority Life, for example. They might attend True Aggie nights but don’t realize SAA hosts it. They may be unfamiliar with the students on USUSA, the Academic Senate or the service center staff.

If student leaders want to represent the student body, they have opportunities such as the fee board, President’s Cabinet, diversity council or they could start a club of their own, to name a few places. Other opportunities are there, but students might

Volunteering Students Share Experiences

By Shelby Smith
STUDENT LIFE CONTENT MANAGER

Opportunities for volunteering at Utah State University and in Cache Valley are abundant for college students.

Students volunteer for campus events, on and off-campus organizations, churches and national clubs all around the Cache Valley area.

Nicole Dellinger is one student who volunteers for Circle K on USU’s campus.

Circle K is a worldwide organization that has a commitment to providing community service and helping build leadership skills.

They are a college extension of the Kiwanis high school volunteering organization. Dellinger helped re-establish the Circle K chapter on USU’s campus.

“There are constant opportunities to help out in the community, but you just need to know where to look,” Dellinger said. “You can find opportunities to serve at church, service organizations such as Kiwanis and even at institutions like CAPSA or any other nonprofit organization.”

Dellinger believes volunteering has helped her leadership skills grow in ways that no other opportunity has.

“Service projects require a lot of planning and execution and so that has helped me with my organizational and people skills,” she said. “But the biggest benefit is being a part of the community and getting to know those in the community.”

Junior Brookelin Backus started volunteering when she was just 14 years old. She now volunteers for the Miss Cache Valley Scholarship Program as well as Operation Underground Railroad. Backus volunteers her time by making flyers and working at booths to educate people about rescuing children from sex trafficking.

“Volunteering has given me social skills, networking opportunities and some intense empathy towards others,” she said. “The people I’ve helped while volunteering have always been so grateful and happy to be a part of what we do.”

Backus got involved with volunteering at these organizations because of her passion for community involvement and the opportunity it gives her to get out of her comfort zone.

“I will always continue to find new organizations to volunteer for. I only wish I would’ve done more volunteer work sooner,” Backus said.

Madison Kondel is another student who volunteers for the Circle K organization on USU’s campus. She has been volunteering there for many years prior to her time at USU. Volunteering is now just a part of who she is.

“Even the small simple tasks in life that you do for other people in unselfish manners help and will always happen throughout your life periodically,” she said.

If Kondel could change one thing about her volunteering experience, it would be jumping in to help out earlier in the process.

“I think a lot of people take advantage of the people in charge of service groups and kind of wait for things to get started,” she said. “But there is a process beforehand where things need help getting started before you can actually start the volunteer work.”

Kondel, Backus and Dellinger have all loved having the opportunity to volunteer during their college experience and encourage other

CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS FINISHING ON CAMPUS

By Allison Allred & Kortni Wells
STUDENT LIFE WRITERS

A drive on or up to the Utah State University campus has most likely been delayed at one point or another from the beginning of the summer to the very tail end. These delays have been caused by construction zones in or around campus.

That's because several changes have been on the rise for Utah State's campus for the past several months and are finally on the downhill slope to being finished. Here's an update on all the construction projects and their estimated time of completion:

500 North Roundabout

A project that caused detours for a majority of the summer is now officially completed. The roundabout features blue pedestrian crosswalks, tying it back to the Aggie Blue students all know and love. This will help students and community members alike make a safer commute to campus, without standstill traffic backing up the seemingly busy intersection, as has been known in the past

Life Sciences Building

This new state of the art science building is nearing completion with the month of November on the horizon for its deadline. The hope is that it will be open for classes for the spring semester of 2019.

Champ Drive

Several projects along Champ Drive have taken place, making paths harder to travel throughout the summer. The projects have been ongoing throughout the last four months but were necessary improvements for the flow of traffic and safety for the remain unsure of what's available, where to go and who to talk to. The SIM can correct misinformation about these opportunities, allow student leaders to direct students to the right source and strengthen inter-organizational communication on campus, providing clarity for both students and campus administrators.

Campus administrators are very supportive of the project. They want students to be successful and engage with their school.

Utah State Vice President for Student Affairs Dr. James Morales said it is especially great for transfer students and incoming freshman.

campus community. Project developments included installing a new sewer line consistent with the roadway. This also brought a revision of the parking lot just south of Old Main that will better help those dropping off children for the Child Development lab. Ray B. West is also going through roof construction to help improve its structure and safety. Champ Drive is now open, and final landscape updates are being made.

Student Housing

Central Suites, otherwise known as the newest housing on central campus is currently open, but is not completed yet. Other housing complexes are being planned for next door, but nothing has yet to be funded. The total budget for the project has also not been released for the architectural design. There aren't any other housing projects currently in the works.

Millennial Towers, a new student-housing unit located at 657 E 1000 N, Logan has been in progress all summer. The complex is

"If students find ways to engage with their school, particularly during the first few weeks of their first semester, they are more likely to be successful. The connections they make help them address any challenges, academic or personal, not only during the first semester but also throughout their entire university career."

Linda Zimmerman said the SIM can "help students connect with other students who have similar interests to better the school and the students college experience".

Physical copies of the SIM were given to incoming freshman during orientation and at the 2018 Aggie Blue Leadership Conference hosted August 20-21. With the help of now fully completed and is ready to be occupied by students.

Subway and new food options come to The Hub, Morty's expands to Blue Square

The Hub, an on-campus food court-style dining establishment has been undergoing renovations and changes throughout the summer. The Hub Food Court will re-open on Monday, Aug. 27. The areas inside The Hub include Cafe Ibis, the Bakery at USU, Taco Time, The Blue Wok, and Scotsman's Corner. The only area inside the Hub that will not be completed by Monday, Aug. 27 is Subway, which has a planned opening on Sept. 5.

A Utah State favorite, Morty's Cafe, will be expanding to Blue Square, the USU-owned housing complex. The popular restaurant's extension will be opening on Monday, Aug. 27. The extension will include more parking and dining space and will allow the restaurant to expand their delivery services.

Morty's Blue Square location will also accommodate USU Student and Faculty Meal Plans because it will be an on-campus cafe. Meal plans at the Morty's extension will work the same way they do at other on-campus dining locations. Students with 10 meals or more per week will be able to use their $7.00 cash-equivalency once-per-day. Individuals with Block Meal Plans will also be able to use up to $7.00 once-per-day. The new location has a reservable conference-room space for meetings, gatherings and parties. Their hours will be the same as graphic designers, students will also find the SIM on the Student Association main page, ususa.usu.edu, with quick links to clubs and basic contact information for directors.

Fall semester 2018 will be loaded opportunities to learn about events, collaborations, and organizations. Seeing both student and admin sides of campus involvement, Griffiths hopes students find an organization that fits their needs.

"With education comes action. Once we know the things we didn't before, it's in our hands to do something about it," she said.

the original Darwin Avenue location. They are open Monday-Thursday 7 a.m. - 10 p.m. and Friday and Saturday 7 AM - 11:59 PM.

Other On-Campus Dining projects in the works include a new location in the Nora Eccles Harrison Museum of Art. The new cafe, called Noni's, is scheduled to open mid-September and will feature coffee and high-end salads and pastries.

Additionally, the new Life Sciences building will include a dining location called Teas-n-Cheese. This new addition will be a Tea House-type establishment alongside a location that will serve gourmet grilled cheese sandwiches.

Construction began on the new Aggie Chocolate facility at the beginning of the summer. A grand opening and ribbon-cutting will take place on September 17.

U.S. Post Office

Construction began on the Post Office in Summer of 2018. The new layout will include a lobby outside of the hallway. It is expected to be completed during this semester.

The progress of these projects will continue to be updated on usstatesman.com as more information becomes available.

COLUMN: Which Aggie players are set to have breakout seasons?

Soccer match postponed for poor air quality

Utah State sophomore wide receiver Savon Scarver scores a touchdown against UNLV during a game in October in Las Vegas. Scarver will look to have a breakout season after ranking fifth on the team in 2017 in receiving yards, and leading the team in average yards per reception.

Are you an Aggie fan trying to get yourself hyped for the upcoming football season? Are you nervous about who is going to fill in for one of your favorite players that graduated last season? Or maybe you're like me, and you're just looking for any possible football fix to pass these final days 'til football season starts. Regardless, I've got you covered. Ladies and gentlemen, I present to you - this year's USU football: breakout players watch list.

By Jaden Johnson
SPORTS CONTENT MANAGER

Darwin Thompson - Junior running back

Ever since I first watched his highlight video following his commitment to Utah State, I've been the self-proclaimed conductor of the Darwin Thompson hype train. For those of you who don't know his name yet, you may recognize him as the dude built like a tree trunk who was front squatting the equivalent of two-and-a-half averaged sized adult men in a recent Twitter video. Thompson played his junior college ball at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, where he LED THE NATION with 1,619 all-purpose yards, was second in the nation with 1,391 rushing yards, and averaged 7.5 yards per carry. Think about just how impressive that is for a second. This dude went from an average high school player who didn't receive a single scholarship offer from any school at any level, to a JuCo All-American in just two years. The Aggies landed a special talent with this guy, and there is still plenty of room aboard the D-Train hype train.

Savon Scarver - Sophomore Wide Receiver

I'll go ahead and admit it, this pick might be a year early. This year's receiving corps is pretty ridiculous, and the depth at wide receiver has been one of the worst-kept secrets of fall camp. With eight of last year's top 11 pass catchers coming back, and newcomers like USC grad-transfer Jalen Greene, JuCo product Devin Heckstall, and multiple very capable freshmen joining the squad, targets are going to be hard to come by. However, I still think Scarver could have a great season. Last season after the quarterback switch from Meyers to Love, Scarver's yards per game jumped from 14 to

26. That's nothing too dramatic, but it's clear that Scarver's beeline speed compliments Love's deep ball. While defenses might at times assign their number one and two coverage guys to Tarver and Greene, that may leave some big play opportunities for Scarver. Not to mention, he's pretty dang good at returning kicks, too.

You would think that a team which returns every starting offensive lineman (plus two more who rotated in frequently) from last season would have a depth chart at that position which is pretty set in stone. But Alfred Edwards has different plans. The 6'7, 310-pound behemoth of a freshman has taken the competition up front to another level, and Aggie fans should go ahead and get to know him now. It's hard to say whether he'll start or not, since he's competing with Roman Andrus, a more than capable senior who had a fantastic junior year. However, he had plenty of opportunities to run with the starters during fall camp and looked every bit as comfortable as the veterans around him. There's a reason he was named the scout team offensive MVP during his redshirt season last year. I expect we'll see plenty of Alfred on the field this fall, and that he'll have a very nice career with the Aggies.

DJ Williams - Junior Cornerback

This is one guy who I really don't feel like Aggie fans have started to appreciate yet, but soon will. One of the big questions following last season, and definitely one of my biggest concerns, was how on earth USU could replace two NFL-calibur guys in the defensive backfield. DJ Williams is part of that answer. With Ja'Marcus Ingram moving over to play Safety this season, the Aggies really needed someone to step up in camp, and Williams climbed the depth chart like a ladder. After spending his freshman season at Chattanooga (go Mocs!) he transferred to Independence CC last season where he earned NJCAA first-team All-American honors. While there are still a lot of questions to be answered in the Aggie defensive secondary, I feel like Williams is going to have a very nice season and bring some much-needed stability to the cornerback spot.

David Woodward - Sophomore Linebacker

This one might be cheating, because I feel like he started to break out toward the end of last season, and I simply feel like he will continue to do so. But my column, my rules, and I say it goes. I really like what I saw from David Woodward last season. It felt like every time he was on the field, whether he was the guy making a tackle or not, he was making some sort of an impact on the play and doing exactly what he was asked to do. Woodward had an absolute monster game against Air Force in his only start of the season, leading the team with 13 total tackles, five solo and a tackle for loss. Now, with Suli Tamaivena and Kevin Meitzenheimer out for at least the first few weeks of the season I expect Woodward to step up big time and earn some serious attention and possibly more playing time down the road.

A letter from the HURD President:

Aggies!

Whether you're returning or you're beginning your college experience, I'd like to be one of the first to welcome you to the greatest school in the nation! Now listen, I could butter you up and talk about school work, dating, how much fun you'll have and blah, blah, blah, but I know what you're really here for. Aggie Athletics. For those of you who don't know or haven't been to a game yet, this is the year to come out and get crazy. We all know traditionally that USU is the LOUDEST, the PROUDEST, and the absolute BEST student section to have ever existed in the history of anything, ever, period. We're going to rock opposing teams and leave them in a fetal position sucking their thumbs, but in order to do that, we need your help. We've got tailgating to do, signs to make, chests to paint, and pre-game ritualizing to execute so that we can be ready to cheer until our little voice boxes can't even pipe up to answer questions in English class.

Now for some quick business. In order to know what to wear and bring to games/events PLEASE follow the USU HURD on social media. Also, if you see myself or anyone else on the HURD around campus, games, or events, don't be afraid to ask us questions or give suggestions on how we can make your life as good as it can be. some requests such as foot rubs and other disgusting wishes may be denied. Last of all, I admire the tenacity and ferociousness at games. The student section is the perfect place to scream all your frustrations out after you get back from your mid-terms. Come bring your friends, your mom, your dentist, and let's get wild! I'm excited for the year to come, and as always, GO AGGIES!

Your Diehard HURD President,

Braden Tomlinson

Reverting to the main stage, the sun had set and the audience welcomed Pixie and the Partygrass Boys. The quirky, high-energy bluegrass band from Salt Lake City was an instant hit and likely the fan-favorite of the night. From original songs about the struggles of living in Utah to tribute covers of the late Aretha Franklin, as well as encores about pudendum, Pixie and the Partygrass Boys made things fun and kept the crowd moving throughout their entire set. Their final exit from the stage was mostly bitter, not sweet, for many in attendance. This dynamic group will be

Cache Valley's

Hidden Treasure

By Thomas Sorenson
OPINION CONTENT MANAGER

I'm here to tell you that Zootah is the happiest place in Cache Valley.

The name might be a little corny, but we unironically call ourselves "Aggies" — a moniker that isn't even a real word, let alone a mascot. And our favorite song is about a dude from the other side of the pond who wears kilts and loves thistle as much as we love sagebrush.

The name is fine.

Tucked into that corner of Logan you only go to once a year for Pioneer Day, Zootah — formerly known as Willow Park Zoo — is easily forgotten about. But when I first moved to town, as a young student trying to find entertainment options with my minimum-wage paychecks and some student loans, the zoo's "donations accepted" entry fee was heaven-sent.

Zootah has grown in the past six years and that donation box has turned into a $4 ticket, but the zoo has remained the best bang for your buck in Logan. You could pay five times as much for a movie ticket and some popcorn to watch CGI dinosaurs and nonsensical plot twists, but it won't be nearly as fulfilling of an experience.

And that's the thing: The price isn't even Zootah's best selling point.

Overwhelmed with your classes? Hoodini the Western Screech Owl has a smile that could melt even the coldest professor's heart and will surely make you feel better.

Life feeling a little empty and you're not sure why? It's because you haven't watched a herd of Hyraxes chase each other around, but Zootah can fix that for you.

Bummed that you've been to two True Aggie Nights and still haven't found love? Appa the yak is blind but he's adorable and will happily listen to your problems.

Ever wonder why you've never hugged an Alpaca? Well if you bee-bop over to Zootah between the hours of 11-12 or 3-4, Monday through Saturday, you can take a swing through a petting zoo that'll warm your soul.

Just want to see a monkey that was named after an obscure order of Franciscan friars? Well by golly Zootah's got your back (this one sounds like a joke but it's not, I promise).

Part of Zootah's charm and beauty is that it is so small. There aren't any large crowds and there's never a line to see one of the animals; it's an intimate and friendly experience you can't get anywhere else.

And a peaceful stroll around one of Cache Valley's hidden treasures is a wonderful way to appreciate the last few days of summer we have, while stocking up on Vitamin D to get you through another Cache Valley winter. So do yourself a favor in the next couple of weeks and head on over to Willow Park.

Disneyland may be the happiest place on earth, but Zootah is the happiest place in Logan.

Thomas Sorenson is a graduate student at Utah State who got a behind the scenes look at Zootah for a story he wrote last spring. His favorite animals at the zoo are the Hyraxes, and he desperately hopes the rumors of red pandas coming to Zootah are true.
